Transparency, Community, and Accountability are key values at Asana Partners. In the last week, we have started to have tough conversations. We have listened to Black voices across our communities. What did we learn? We have not done enough. We cannot stay silent. We need to make changes.

We feel pain and embarrassment that it took the deaths of George Floyd, Ahmaud Arbery, Breonna Taylor, and countless other Black Americans before them, to shed light on the prejudice and hatred that persists in our country and its systems.

We want to make ourselves clear: we unequivocally condemn racism, white supremacy, police brutality, and systemic injustice in all forms. We stand firmly with our Black employees, business partners, and customers.

We do not have all of the answers, nor do we claim to, but we do know that things must change. We're going to do more – both at Asana Partners and within our communities – starting now.
